Resources for Listening Project & Seed Project

What is a listening project?

A listening project is an intentional effort to listen to neighbours and stakeholders in the neighbourhood, with the purpose of asking questions about the strengths and assets of the community and identifying potential neighbourhood partners to address an identified need.

The goal of your listening project is to learn more about an aspect of your focus community and create a holistic seed project that builds upon what you heard to bring greater shalom for the community.

What is a Seed Project response?

A seed project is a one-time small action or event that meets the following criteria:

1. It is done with local resources
These are assets - community space, people, skills, materials, supplies etc.
2. It is done to address the “groanings” of the target community
These are current examples of broken shalom as described by the community
3. It involves the participation of those within the target community
These are done “with” the community not exclusively “for” the community

What are some examples of seed projects?

1. A tenant meeting from an apartment complex to devise a plan to address pests in the building with the landlord.
2. Educational training for children and adults about child sexual abuse
3. A reading/story event and book-swap with children where the church donates some books, the community donates some books and community participants help run the event.
4. A basketball tournament made up of teams from the church and two rival gangs within the community where the church repairs the courts and the community coordinates the rival gangs/teams
5. An afternoon tea hosted by tenants in an apartment complex in order to form new relationships amongst mothers.
